How can I view/download the full-text of a statute, rather than section by section?

When viewing any section, look for the Browse All (small page) icon in the header. Click the top icon (of the main Statute) to view the statute. Longer statutes will be broken up into parts on screen but the full statute can be printed or downloaded as a PDF.

PART VII — QUEBEC: PAULIAN ACTION

PART VII — QUEBEC: PAULIAN ACTION

31. — PAULIAN ACTION (ACTION EN INOPPOSABILITÉ)*

(a) — Introduction

For historical reasons, Quebec has a civil law system based on the French civil code while the other provinces and territories of Canada are common law jurisdictions based on British law. Quebec was part of New France, a French colony, until the British victory at Quebec City in 1759. Britain permitted Quebec to continue to apply French civil law in certain matters, particularly in the area of property and civil rights, while imposing British law over certain federal matters such as criminal law. In 1867, the British North America Act, 1867 formally divided legal jurisdiction between the federal and provincial governments. In the provinces with respect to matters which were within provincial legislative jurisdiction, the civil law system of the province of Quebec was maintained.

The civil law system of Quebec is based on the French civil code. In the 6th century, the Emperor Justinian decided to impose order on the common law of the Roman Empire. He ordered his legal experts to compile all the various laws, texts and proclamations into one book, a civil code. The first Code was completed in 529 and later expanded to include Justinian's own laws, and additional books on certain areas of the law. The Justinian Code, made up of the Code, the Digest, and the Institutes, was completed in 534.³

Today, many jurisdictions, including France, Germany, Italy, Louisiana, Quebec and a number of Latin American countries, maintain one or more civil codes in which are set out the main principles of their law.⁴ A civil code contains a comprehensive statement of rules, many of which are framed as broad, general principles designed to deal with any dispute that may arise. Code-based legal systems differ from common law systems in that courts turn first to the applicable code provision to determine the response to a legal question. Legal writing, called "doctrine" in Quebec, also plays a very significant role in many civil law decisions.

Other cases will be used as a guide to assist judges in their interpretation of the code provisions, but it is possible for a civil law court to interpret the code in a different manner than have other judges of the same or even of a higher court.

In Quebec, courts do refer extensively to other cases in their decisions and may, in practice, refer to their being "bound" by a
